

Tim Hendrix

Tim Hendrix is a venture capital investor at the US-based Agility Investment Fund, where he serves as a General Partner. Agility is headquartered in San Francisco and Boston. His specialties include early stage startup operations, organization building, and rapid business scaling.

He also currently serves as a Senior Director, previously Head of Operations, for healthcare technology startup Truepill in San Mateo, California. There he helped scale the organization from a Series B to a billion dollar valuation in Series D with exponential growth. Previous to healthcare tech, Tim served in multiple operations roles with Tesla including: the critical launch and scaling of Model 3 and Model Y, push for profitability, and solidifying of the highest valued automotive manufacturer in the world. At Tesla, he was able to help improve accounting of the seat manufacturing plant, the Model 3 & Y production lines, and finally all of vehicle operations within the Bay area.

Tim earned a master's degree in finance at Harvard University where he concentrated on investment theory, including: portfolio optimization, venture capital, and financial analysis. He holds a bachelor's degree from Bellevue University in Supply Chain Management and multiple certificates. Outside of formal institutions, Tim has pursued additional training and education in real estate investing, strategic management, corporate finance, and consulting.

Tim has been recognized through his academic career for presentation and public speaking excellence. Outside of professional and educational settings, Tim often appears as a guest on multiple podcasts, lecture series, and fundraising events. Connecting with Tim is as easy as a direct message on LinkedIn where he is often sharing his passions and expertise.